Risk Disclosure Notice

Eurotrade International Ltd and Eurotrade SA (Pty) Ltd

Trading and investing can cause substantial losses. CFDs and leveraged foreign exchange are complex, speculative products: you can lose all funds committed to a trading account rapidly. Actual shares and fractional interests also carry a risk of losing the amount invested. Use only money you can afford to lose and obtain independent advice where needed.

1 Companies and purpose

1.1 This notice applies to services offered under the Eurotrader brand by Eurotrade International Ltd in Mauritius (registration 197389 GBC, FSC licence GB22201125) and Eurotrade SA (Pty) Ltd in South Africa (registration K2017223774, FSP 44351). Eurotrade SA acts as intermediary for Eurotrade International Ltd. Each company remains responsible for its own service.

1.2 Eurotrade International Ltd is the trading provider under its accepted client agreement and the broker for actual and fractional shares offered through that arrangement. Eurotrade SA's intermediary agreement does not make it the issuer of your CFDs or the custodian of your shares. A website company switcher does not change your contracting company or regulatory protection.

1.3 Read this notice with the applicable agreements, product specifications and relevant execution, copy trading, share and funding terms before using a service. Availability depends on eligibility, permissions and account acceptance. This notice describes material general risks; it cannot list every event or replace the information for a particular instrument.

2 CFDs and leveraged foreign exchange

2.1 A CFD is a contract for the difference in value of a reference instrument. A share CFD does not give ownership, voting rights or delivery of the underlying share. A currency CFD or rolling leveraged foreign exchange position does not necessarily result in delivery of currency. Check the instrument and settlement method rather than relying on its name.

2.2 Leverage increases exposure relative to the money committed. A small adverse price movement can consume a large part or all of your equity. Required margin is security for exposure, not the maximum economic risk. Financing, commissions and other applicable charges can increase losses.

2.3 Maintain sufficient free margin and monitor positions. The provider can increase margin requirements and close positions under the applicable terms. A margin warning is not guaranteed. A deposit in transit may arrive too late to prevent closure. Hedged positions may still require margin and can incur costs or be closed separately.

2.4 Eurotrade International Ltd provides contractual negative balance protection for its CFD accounts under its agreement. This does not protect the money invested or guarantee execution at a margin threshold. It is not a statutory compensation scheme and does not automatically cover liabilities from separate cash share, payment, tax or other services. Any allegation of fraud or abuse must be supported and addressed under the agreement and applicable law.

3 Prices orders and liquidity

3.1 Prices can change suddenly, gap or become unavailable. Markets may close, suspend or impose restrictions. A quoted or requested price is not a guarantee of execution. Reduced liquidity and wider spreads are common around announcements, market openings, closures and exceptional events.

3.2 Market and stop orders can execute at a different price, including a worse price. A stop-loss is not a guaranteed loss limit unless a separately identified guaranteed feature applies. Limit orders can remain unfilled. An order cancellation or amendment may arrive after execution. Partial fills and delayed confirmations can occur.

3.3 OTC prices may differ from an exchange, another dealer or a chart. Quotes can incorporate spreads, conversion, financing and the provider's pricing method. Underlying market data may be delayed. A profitable result on a demonstration account does not establish that a live order would have been filled on the same terms.

3.4 Currency movements can increase or reduce returns and collateral value independently of the instrument price. Conversion rates and costs can differ from published reference rates. Trading in a currency different from your spending or account currency adds risk.

4 Actual shares and fractional interests

4.1 Actual shares are investments distinct from CFDs. The legal ownership, nominee, execution and custody arrangements must be explained before dealing. Shares may be recorded through an omnibus account or nominee; your rights can be beneficial or contractual rather than direct registration in your name.

4.2 Fractions may represent an interest in an aggregated whole share or a contractual entitlement under the disclosed arrangement. They may not be transferable, individually registered or independently tradable on an exchange. Do not assume that every fraction carries voting rights or the same insolvency protection as a directly registered whole share.

4.3 Share prices can fall to zero. Issuer failure, dilution, suspension, delisting, political events and changes in law can cause loss or prevent sale. Dividends and corporate action proceeds are not guaranteed. Taxes, withholding, rounding and allocation rules can affect net proceeds, especially for fractions.

4.4 Settlement may take time and can fail or be delayed. Unsettled proceeds may not be withdrawable. A custodian, nominee, execution provider or bank can fail. Insolvency law, record reconciliation and overseas proceedings may delay or reduce recovery. Segregation reduces some risks but is not insurance against every loss.

4.5 Voting, elections, transfers and corporate actions depend on the disclosed service and deadlines. Fractions may be sold for cash during a corporate action or transfer. Outside trading hours, prices may be less liquid. A cash share account does not authorise margin borrowing, short sales or securities lending without the necessary separate terms and permissions.

5 Copy trading

5.1 Choosing a trader or strategy is an investment decision. Past results, rankings and displayed returns do not predict future performance. Figures may omit some costs or reflect a different starting date, balance, leverage or risk. A copied trader can change approach, incur losses or stop participating.

5.2 Your fills and results may differ because of timing, minimum size, rounding, instrument availability, pricing, balance, connection or account settings. A copied position may be larger relative to your funds than expected. Correlated strategies can increase concentration rather than diversify risk.

5.3 Automation can continue opening or maintaining exposure while you are offline. Stopping copying may not close existing positions; check the platform's action and confirmation. Performance fees or other remuneration can create incentives to take risk. No provider or copied trader guarantees capital or returns.

6 Crypto-asset funding

6.1 Crypto deposits are payment transfers where specifically enabled and lawful; they are separate from crypto CFDs and from custody or dealing in crypto investments. An available screen does not override residence restrictions or South African exchange-control requirements.

6.2 Transfers can be irreversible. An incorrect network, token, address, memo or unsupported transfer can cause permanent loss. Verify instructions through your authenticated account. Do not disclose private keys, passwords or seed phrases, and do not send funds to an employee's personal wallet.

6.3 Network congestion, protocol changes, wallet-provider failure, sanctions screening and compliance checks can delay or prevent credit or return. Prices can move before conversion or confirmation. Stablecoins can depeg or lose redemption value. Network and conversion costs can reduce the amount credited or refunded. A pending transfer does not meet a margin requirement.

7 Operational counterparty and legal risks

7.1 You depend on the relevant contracting provider and any banks, custodians or technology providers used for the service. A group brand does not merge legal entities or give a claim against every group company. Overseas arrangements can involve different laws, recovery rights and complaint routes.

7.2 Platform, power, internet, data-feed, software and cyber incidents can interrupt access or produce incorrect displays. Third-party tools can malfunction. Keep secure access and use the agreed support route promptly. An alternative channel may not accept trading instructions unless expressly authorised.

7.3 The companies and providers can have commercial interests in spreads, commissions, execution or referral arrangements. Read the applicable conflicts disclosures. Do not rely on an introducer's promise of guaranteed profit or authority inconsistent with your account documents.

7.4 Regulation does not guarantee performance, solvency or reimbursement. Do not assume that UK, EU or South African compensation protections apply to a Mauritius account. Any statutory entitlement depends on the actual entity, product and applicable law; none is created merely by this notice.

8 Personal assessment and support

8.1 Consider your knowledge, experience, financial resources, objectives and ability to bear loss. A successful eligibility or knowledge check is not a recommendation, guarantee or assurance that an individual trade is suitable. Do not borrow money or rely on essential living funds to speculate.

8.2 Costs, financing, taxation and exchange controls affect outcomes. Review the applicable specifications and charges before instructing. Seek independent financial, legal or tax advice when uncertain. Contact support@eurotrader.com for clarification, identifying Mauritius or South Africa and the product concerned. Do not proceed while the instrument, provider or payment beneficiary is unclear.
